2. Purpose

The programme aims to develop and enhance the students' own artistic practice and methods in film, where the camera is the key tool. Much emphasis is placed on the student's ability to critically reflect on the student's own and others' artistic practice. Upon completing the degree, the student should be able to display a very good understanding of the film medium's various fields and the significance of film and the camera in society.

Studies are based on an expanded view of the film field, where new professional roles and opportunities are emerging along with technological and societal developments. Through their practical, artistic work, students contribute to knowledge creation in the field, where new knowledge about ethics, technology and aesthetics is being formulated. After their studies, the students can work professionally as filmmakers in professional roles such as producers and directors. They will also contribute to new professional roles that can be developed within the film field and the surrounding society, where deeper understanding is becoming increasingly relevant and in demand.

The programme prepares students for graduate-level research.

6. Content and structure

The first semester aims at training the student's ability to relate to and process an existing visual material, where the focus is to raise the student's level of awareness of ethical and aesthetic reasons for making selections. The teaching focuses on aspects of archives through lectures, seminars and practical exercises. The student locates and clarifies their own interest and theme, thereby identifying an artistic inquiry in their own filmic work.

During the second semester, the student explores their own filmic practice with respect to its method, process and visualisation. Through group discussions, students exercise their critical ability in relation to their own and other students' artistic work. The students practice placing their work in a context consisting of artistic research and practical knowledge cultivation with respect to reflected professional expertise, by participating in seminars on research and in activities in the faculty's research environment.

The third semester aims to challenge and develop the student's artistic work and its relationship to the film field and its public areas. The teaching focuses on production methodology, organisation and working practice. During the course, the student completes a film project and prepares and plans for a public, official event where the film project will be shown.

The fourth and final semester aims to broaden the student's ability to manage and apply the individual's artistic work in a conceptual and practical sense. Students will make their film project public and present it before an audience. Similarly, the student will present theoretical, methodological and practical knowledge in reflective written form and carry out a written degree project by describing and analysing their own artistic process.
